As one grim atrocity follows another in unexpected locations across Europe – Nice, Munich and a church in a small town in Normandy – everyone seems to have an opinion. Around family dinner tables, in bars and cafes, on social networks, everyone has a view about what is happening and who is to blame. For some, it's Islam or refugees – for others we should exonerate both at all costs. The problem is that it isn't opinions we need now, but intelligence and understanding. _____

☐ a) Terrorism is political violence against a civilian population and its infrastructure, committed by a non-state actor with a political objective.

☐ b) The traumatised public is entitled to ask, after such unpredictable attacks as those we have seen in Germany and France, why such attacks happen at all.

☐ c) Nihilism or mental health problems lie behind many of the terrorist acts committed.

☐ d) Doctrinaire thinking only serves to divide public opinion, favour populism and eventually weaken society. (Correct Answer - ✓)

Directions for questions 5 to 7: Each of the following questions has a paragraph from which a sentence has been deleted. From the given options, choose the one that completes the para in the most appropriate way.

The tax saving for senior citizens may look significant for many, however it will be illusory. For one thing, one must have an income stream that is large enough to qualify for savings. Even more contrived is the logic that senior citizens can plan their taxes better by investing in tax-saving instruments. Such instruments are essentially long-dated and even if senior citizens have enough income they would be ill advised to lock their money in these. The Finance Minister is absolutely right when he says that senior citizens deserve special attention. _____

- ☐ a) The Finance Minister has created a new category 'Very senior citizens' 80 years and above, who will qualify for a higher exemption limit.
- ☐ b) Today's senior citizens depend on limited fixed incomes and did not have many opportunities to save and plan for their retirement during their working years.
- ☒ c) Government support to them ought to go well beyond tax reliefs and address the concerns of the aged in a holistic manner. (Correct Answer - ✓)
- ☐ d) It is an administrative decision to reduce the qualifying age for senior citizens from 65 years to 60.

Directions for questions 8 and 9: Four alternative summaries are given below each text. Choose the option that best captures the essence of the text and indicate the number corresponding with it in the box provided below each question.

The goals of planning the economy emphasize a steady rate of growth at about 5-6 percent per annum, a continuous and perceptible improvement in living standards in the foreseeable future. This involves a more equitable distribution of income and wealth, a balanced pattern of regional development and lesser dependence on foreign aid by pursuing policies of export promotion and import substitution and expansion of basic, heavy and defence industries with the object of building an industrial base of the economy. There is no doubt that a judicious and harmonious process of development requires a balancing of these objectives. More and more expert opinion is veering round to the view that an employment oriented strategy of industrial development provides the best answer to the challenge of unemployment and underemployment posed to an underdeveloped economy like India. That being so, it would be worthwhile to outline the contours of an employment-oriented strategy.

1. Growth of the economy in India can happen only if there is a steady improvement in the standards of living of everyone. The industrial base of the country should be developed so as to generate employment and the country should not depend too much on foreign aid.
2. The objectives of sound planning for economic growth should consider a steady rise of national wealth and an equitable distribution of the same. Industrial development, which generates employment, may be a useful policy in achieving this objective.
3. Sound planning for economic growth involves industrial development, which will generate employment and wealth. Increased self-reliance and an equitable distribution of wealth will ensure a steady 5-6 per cent growth.
4. Planning for the growth of the economy should involve a steady annual growth and a discernable improvement in living standards. Increased self-reliance and a balanced progress as also industrial development, which generates employment, is a good policy to pursue.

Proponents of Intelligent Design – people who feel certain elements of the organic universe are simply too complex to have originated randomly – have just taken a body blow. Since the ID contention is that members of different species were created as separate full blown specimens, its main objection to the Darwinian descent has been the so called paucity of evidence of in between forms which could demonstrate the process of mutation from one kind of animal to another. But now, in a dramatic discovery reported in the science journal Nature, paleontologists working in northern Canada have found the fossil remains of a previously unknown fish with four legs. The “missing” link named Tiktaalik roseae - which lived about 375 million years ago - was a metre long crocodile headed fish with scales and gills and also a primitive kind of wrist with finger like bones inside its fins, along with the skull, neck and ribs of the earliest land dwellers. It’s clear to researchers that the creature was capable of leaving its marine environment from time to time in order to adopt a totally different terrestrial lifestyle thus eventually leading to the rise of amphibians, reptiles and warm-blooded mammals such as homo sapiens.

1. Proponents of Intelligent Design believe that some creatures are so complex that they cannot have sprung up on their own. The evidence of the fish fossil, which seems to have been an amphibian and ultimately led to the rise of the homo sapiens proves their point.
2. Advocates of Intelligence Design would like to believe that creatures couldn’t have sprung up on their own but found no evidence to substantiate their belief. So they fell in with the Darwinian theory of evolution and the discovery of the fossil remains of an amphibian like fish is proof of their gradual mutation into the homo sapiens.
3. Advocates of Intelligent Design profess that some species are born as fully developed specimens because there is no evidence of a gradual development. However, the discovery in Canada of a crocodile-headed amphibian fish was proof of the Darwinian theory of evolution.
4. Tiktaalik roseae - a crocodile headed fish with gills and scales is thought to be the species from which the homosapiens evolved. The finding of this fossil disproves the contention of the Intelligent Design proponents that there is no proof of mutation and that creatures were born as fully developed specimens.

Directions for questions 10 to 13: Select the best answer for each of the following questions based on the information given in the texts.

Till yesterday, marketers looking for a celebrity endorser were, in a sense, spoilt for choice. All that was required of them was to put a large enough sum of money on the table, and they could pick and choose from a pantheon of Bollywood actors and cricketers. But all that changed when the Board of Control for Cricket in India decreed that cricketers can henceforth endorse no more than three brands.

Which of the following could be a consequence of the above?

- ☒ a) The scramble for Bollywood celebrities is all set to intensify. (Your answer - ✓)
- ☐ b) Not everyone agrees that marketers see cricketers and Bollywood stars as being mutually replaceable as endorsers.
- ☐ c) In the endorsement game, size increasingly matters, and with just six-seven bankable stars around, the competition is fierce.
- ☐ d) Even companies that compete with one another aren't entirely averse to hiring the services of the same endorser.
